Update: Coronavirus/COVID-19 and how we are seeking to mitigate the risks

With the world on high alert regarding the current Coronavirus/COVID-19 pandemic, we wanted to take this opportunity to share with you the steps we have taken at Ausbil to ensure continuity of operations, while also focusing on the health and wellbeing for our investors, staff, and the other stakeholders with whom we deal with daily.

The exogenous shock of the coronavirus, a 'black swan' event as some call it, has already seen an extraordinary global response. We believe our best contribution is made in calm, focused and well considered business continuity, and in how we manage our investment portfolios for our clients through this period.

Our 22-year track record has weathered some of the most extreme crises in markets, and generated outperformance across the long-term, and this situation will be no different. We will experience a period of volatility and alarm, but markets will eventually calm, and return to normal trading. As an affiliate of New York Life, a Fortune 500 company, we are also able to make use of shared information and resources around dealing with the coronavirus, and its impact.

In the meantime, in managing through this evolving situation, we can confirm the following.

- We have a comprehensive Business Continuity Plan (BCP) that is tested regularly and contemplates pandemics.
- As of Monday, 23 March 2020, we have moved to fully implement a remote working environment and we are functionally equipped to do this. Therefore, all staff are currently not required to come into our Sydney headquarters and are working remotely.
- We operate solely within Australia and we do not have any offshore offices.
- We and the Grosvenor Place building management (where our head office is located) have protocols in place regarding building access to our offices.
- We are monitoring and following all Australian Government protocols with regard to COVID-19.
- We have suspended all domestic and international travel.
- We have been in touch with, and received assurance, regarding business continuity from our critical service providers in technology, custody, operations and other areas.
- We have established a cross-functional COVID-19 response team led by our Head of Information Technology, reporting to Ausbil's Chief Executive Officer, Ross Youngman, that will oversee and monitor our COVID-19 response.
